“ He was my big brother. He protected me when we lived in France from kids who wanted to crush me with the 6ft beach ball. Other incidents would happen throughout our childhood and he would be there. I came to regard him as my guardian angel. He was shy and unassuming. Under the shyness was a kindness and a strength of purpose that helped to define the man he was. There are so many memories of our childhood. At the time, they were experiences we shared, never thinking these experiences would not last forever. The experiences have been lived; like photographs, they will stay in my memories. God speed Mick. Rest eternally with wife, Annie; mother, Dorothy; father, George, and sister, Bobbie. I'm not that little girl anymore, but you will always be with me when I might need a little extra help!
